As a guider providing esoteric insights your ability to communicate effectively with clients is key. However, situations may arise where a client joins a call but does not speak English, creating a potential communication barrier. Here's how to handle these situations with professionalism and care:

1. If you speak the client's language

If you are fluent in the client's preferred language, feel free to conduct the session in that language. This will create a more comfortable and personalized experience for the client. Remember to confirm with the client that you understand their needs before proceeding.

2. If you do not speak the client's language

In cases where you do not share a common language with the client, kindly and respectfully guide them toward an alternative solution in the call and right after it ends double the messages in the chat:

- Explain the situation politely: Let the client know that you are unable to conduct the session in their language but want to ensure they still receive valuable insights.
 - Example: "I apologize, but I can only provide guidance in English. To make sure you get the best experience, I recommend using our chat feature."
- Direct them to the chat option: Inform the client that the chat platform allows for more flexibility, as you can use translation tools to provide accurate and insightful responses.

- Example: "On chat, I'll be able to use a translator to better understand and respond to your questions. This way, we can communicate more effectively."

Why chat is a great alternative

- Translation tools: In chat, you can leverage translation tools to bridge the language gap and provide thoughtful, accurate responses.
- Convenience: Clients can communicate in their preferred language without feeling pressured to understand or speak English fluently.

By following these steps, you can ensure that every client, regardless of their language proficiency, feels heard and supported in their journey toward gaining insights. Your adaptability and kindness in these situations will reflect your dedication to providing excellent service.
