From our experience of working on live chats, we have an idea of when the chat may end, and at these moments we are able to activate the user to keep them interested and prolong the chat. On live chats, we can see the end of the chat thanks to the counter of money on the user's balance. However, how do you know when the conversation is over when there is an audio call, and at what moment you need to activate the user?

In audio calls, you'll also be able to see the flow of money on the user's balance, and when this money runs out (which will actually signal the end of the call soon), you'll also be able to activate the user to keep your conversation going!

Why is it important to activate users at the end of an audio call?

Firstly, this is necessary to extend the duration of your call with the user, to make him or her want to replenish again and come to talk to you.

Secondly, it is necessary so that you can create a positive impression of your call and of this format of service on the platform, for example, to provide information faster, tell details, show your expertise.

How to activate a user during a call?

Activating a user during an audio call and a live chat is not really that different, and you don't need to come up with any new ways to keep them interested in the end. The only thing you need to be careful about is which method you can use at which time. So, how can you activate a user at the end of a call?

1. Make interesting offers!

This is the base! It is interesting, accurate and relevant offers that can activate the user the most! After all, whether a user wants to continue a conversation with you or not depends on what you offer and how.

Pay most attention to engagement!

Engagements for the user should be interesting, relate to their pain, be accurate and intriguing. Please note that your engagement should be an offer, not a clarification at the end of your call, because if the call comes to an end and the user just talks about their life, they are unlikely to want to pay again and continue the conversation. Because if, at the end of the call, it is YOU who starts telling the user interesting details, they will not just leave them, and will certainly come to you again!

Situation. You see that the user has $1 left on their balance, and it is logical that the call will end in a minute or less. Before that, you talked about the relationship between the user and his partner, but you realize that you haven't talked about the future yet! This is your moment to activate the user!

- Oh my dear, my cards are showing me some very interesting details about your future together! Let's do a reading on what awaits you both in the future!

Of course, the user will agree, because in addition to offering them an interesting topic on pain, you add intrigue and emotion to your reading with "interesting details".

Make sure that your engagements reveal new aspects of the user's pain, are interesting and really accurate.

It's also very important to watch your tone when you propose, because it's the interest and emotion that will come from the way you say certain engagements. Your tone should be positive and curious, using interjections like "Ohhh", "Mgg interesting", "Wow" will add emotional color to your sentences, which is so important!

Don't be afraid to suggest rituals or meditations!

Rituals and other practices can really help to activate a user on an audio call. After all, a quick solution to a user's problem can really keep them interested at the end of the call and make them come back to you again to complete the ritual, or just start it and get results.

Please note! The suggestion of your rituals or other practices should be appropriate, in a chat, to close the pain quickly and to respond to this pain. Because if the user wants her ex back, and you offer her a practice to cleanse her energies, it is unlikely that this will activate her on the call.

Also, this method of activation should not be used at the first end of audio calls; in such moments, it is better to use engagement, intrigue, or emotionality so that you can see how the user will continue to replenish and whether he or she is interested in the call format at all.

2. Keep the intrigue going!

It's no secret that intrigue is what helps us keep users engaged at the end of a live chat. It's worth noting right away that audio calls are no exception. After all, intrigue stimulates attention and interest, and encourages the user to further interact with you as an expert. Especially when you can enhance this intrigue with the interest of your tone!

Emotional intrigue

It's the way you speak, the way you present information, the emotions you show that create interest in the user. After all, the user does not see you and can only hear you and read your emotions through the conversation.

By showing more emotion at the end, you can activate the user, making them want to continue the conversation and replenish again. After all, if you react so emotionally, it means it's really important!

You can show your emotionality through expressiveness, voice intonation, and the choice of the right interjections. Your emotional intrigue should work in tandem with the verbal intrigue, so that your emotions are supported by some interesting information. Of course, this works best with engagement.

However, please note that your emotionality should not be intrusive or unusual in a call, it should be natural so as not to scare the user away or excite them!

Intrigue through a balance of positive and negative

Throughout your call, you'll keep a balance of negativity and positivity, but it works great at the end as a moment of intrigue! Especially when you amplify it with some other tone or reactions.

When you add a warning to positive information for the user, it evokes emotions in the user and creates a desire to learn about this warning information.

3. Be emotional!

Showing emotion is a key aspect of effective communication with users at the end of a call. Emotionality allows you to create a closer and more personal communication, which increases the chances of successful activation and further interaction.

 Empathize. Show your users at the end of the call that you understand their feelings and emotions. Empathy allows you to show the user that their problem is really important to you, and you really want to influence its solution. Often, we forget about empathy in the middle of a chat and sometimes use it only at the beginning, but it's worth remembering that users always feel emotions. Of course, your empathy should be accurate and match the user's pain!

 Watch your tone of voice. Use your voice expression to convey your emotions. A positive tone of voice can help create a warm and engaging atmosphere that will help to attract and activate users.

👉 Use emotional words and expressions. Use emotionally charged words and expressions to convey your feelings and create an emotional connection with the user.

For example:

"I'm so excited to see what cards will come out now"

"My dear, I'm just so happy!"

"It's just incredible, my emotions are overwhelming"

"I feel so good after our conversation, you have amazing energy!"

👉 Treat everyone differently! Remember the individuality of each user and try to establish a personal connection with each of them. Someone will need more emotion from you, someone less, and that's okay. During communication, try to find out what works best for this particular user, what their reaction is, how they express their feelings.

4. Keep the tone of communication positive!

A positive tone of voice is the basis for your conversation with the user during the entire call. But don't forget about it at the end. When you realize that the chat may end, don't let your tone show the user that something is wrong. On the contrary, continue your conversation on a positive note, make suggestions with a positive tone.

After all, a positive tone of communication is the key to the user's impression of your call. And even a small deviation from this tone at the end can ruin this impression.

How can you continue to communicate positively?

1. Use positive words. Pay attention to your speech and word choice to create a positive impression. Use expressions that evoke smiles and joy, and avoid negative language.
2. Be optimistic. Express optimism and support in your words. A positive attitude can increase the user's confidence in reading and help improve their mood.
3. Create a friendly atmosphere. Treat users with respect and acceptance. The way you show them that you are interested in their problem, understand the seriousness of the problem, and respect their questions will influence whether they want to come back to you or not.

By following these small moments at the end of the call, you can successfully engage the user in a conversation in the future. It is very important to note that all these points work best in tandem and often depend on each other.

However, you should remember that users are different, and when activating a user at the end, you should rely on your experience with them to offer something that will work for that particular user!
