

Guide to extending audio calls

🕒 Created	@January 20, 2025 4:47 PM
🏷️ Tags

NebulaX has a whale of a business model, and therefore it is important for us to keep our users on the platform as long as possible. The main task is to provide useful information to the user that will resonate, but how do you do this when your call lasts a long time and it seems like you've talked about everything?

This guide will help you to extend your conversations with users, find leads for dialogues, and benefit 3 parties - the user, yourself, and business.

In this guide, we will talk about:

1. Types of whales. What is their main difference, and why is it important to keep track of it?
2. How to understand what the user needs and how to move from topic to topic (tone of voice, strategy, building relationships with the user).
3. Life hacks and tips to simplify the life of an expert.

Types of base whales

There are two types of whales:

1. Calm (even when upset), doesn't talk much, and expects more from you.

▼ Detailed description of this type

A calm whale is a person who can be in different states, come in upset, happy, or neutral. These users are mostly looking for a conversation about their pain, they may sometimes ask questions - but usually this whale comes because the EXPERT has proven to be someone who resonates with them, understands the pain, and is always interested in looking more and deeper.

The user wants to know more even without having super specific life changes or questions, and will be here while the expert tells them. It is important to show these users what is going on with their pain.

For example: A user has been dumped by her boyfriend, and they haven't talked for 3 weeks. The expert provides information - but what does he think, feel, do? What led to this decision, why is there no impetus? And at this point, the user opens the veil of secrecy, because if you don't know this, it seems that the person has been ignored for 3 weeks.

With such users, you need to be constantly on your toes throughout the conversation to keep it interesting, and therefore, sometimes you need to be prepared for such conversations by an expert so that you always have topics to talk about and share.

2. Emotional- these users usually already have many questions, they know exactly what questions they need, but will usually be happy to learn even more.

▼ Detailed description of this type

Emotional whale - this user usually has a specific pain, it is difficult for him to focus on other things, but at the same time, he has questions. And they have a lot of questions, they react emotionally and quickly to the information provided by the expert, and they can ask even more questions.

Of course, it's a little easier with such users, because during the conversation, the user can ask a lot of questions that will also lead the expert to even deeper topics. With such a user, you need more mental preparation and focus, because there are a lot of questions, and it is important to answer all of them in a way that resonates with the user so that he or she wants to come back more and more.

What is the main difference, and how to behave during a call?

When you build a strong relationship with a user, you must also understand WHAT you are going to communicate with the user about. Every whale needs some training, because a simple energy check won't get you very far.

With calm whales, you can go into more philosophical topics, look at their relationships from the side of karma, working out who they were in the past and who they will be in the future, what their relationships will be like in 10 years.

These are dreamers who will be happy to listen to what you have to offer, and the hardest part is to offer it. To do this, you need to understand what kind of user they are, look at them and understand: "Do I need to read an additional guide to a new tool, and think about what new things I can tell this whale?"

With emotional whales, it's still a little easier to make an offer, but you need to be more focused and fast.

They require much more attention and support than calm users, and it is important for them to receive answers to all their questions, while the expert should also show how much he or she feels and sympathizes with the user. Therefore, these users require a lot of focus and empathy. They are more focused on this stage of life, they are in pain now, and they want a solution as soon as possible, not sometime later.

You need to build a strategy depending on the type of whale

With the calm one - prepare for your conversation, it will take 5 minutes, but you will be able to generate a bunch of questions that will lead you to a long conversation. This way, you won't have to come up with something to talk about on the spot, and the user won't leave quickly. Also, during the chat, you will be able to generate more and more ideas based on those that have already been created.

With emotional users, remember what you talked about, offer checks if the user hasn't already done so, and try to give the user more support, because emotional users talk about their pain. They need to be given love and protection. Give the whale a sense of a safe place, and give clear answers that will resonate more with the pain. Because such whales lack support and words to tell them how good they are, and the whole world cannot understand how special they are. They rarely need "working" advice because they are not ready to work on it now, and it is important for them to express their emotions.

How to understand what the user needs and skillfully move from topic to topic?

With the types of users figured out, now it's important to understand how to work with them. Of course, in order to move from topic to topic, it is very important for us to know what to switch to, and it is best to do it organically.

During your communication, the user who is in love will be interested in everything, even in the smallest details, such as "what ring will he wear at the wedding?". Given that you have been communicating with the user for some time, you will know what their reactions are to the engagements, information, and your words. Therefore, there are also several ways to understand and separate this.

Tone of voice

First, in order to understand and learn more about the user, focus on the way they speak, and you can even ask "Oh darling, I feel that your energy is still bothered, is there anything you want to tell me?"

All people have their own personal tone of voice, as soon as you see that a user who is usually energetic, can be happy, pleasant to talk to, is reserved today, it means that there is something else in their head that worries them, but they are used to communicating with you only about their pain, so the client does not ask.

Let's say that after the question above, the user answers you "Ugh, it's just my job, so stressed because of it" - a new topic opens up, because we all know that work is important.

And we all want to know when we'll get a promotion, and will this job even open our financial channel?

During this reading, you also increase the user's confidence - wow, it seems like we talked about love, but the expert still felt something wrong! And you also support the user, showing him/her what a great expert is, how deeply they look and how much expert cares about the client.

Let's take a look at examples:

Situation 1: You've already had a chat about the underlying pain, and the prognosis seems positive, but you can tell by the user's feelings and tone that she's not the same as usual when she ends the chat and runs off to do her stuff. The user is still in pain. You ask again and it turns out that no, not everything is fine

- My dear, the energies of the cards show me that there is a stone on your heart. Are you okay, my dear?
- To be honest, not really. I'm a bit upset with her at the moment
- Oh, seems as his usual mood recently... Dear, why you are upset with her? Should I check if she has good influence?
- Yes, because I felt the same thing as well, I also feel my friendship.

And your entire dialog is extended again, and the conversation continues, opening up more and more aspects for future conversations.

Situation 2. For example, you have a whale with whom you have talked a lot, he is one of the calm whales, so sometimes it is difficult to get something out of him, and there are almost no changes in his life. But you notice a change in his tone of voice, he speaks more sluggishly, calmly, and even more withdrawn. You inquire, and it reveals the news to you. The user has met someone new. Isn't that great?

- Darling, I feel that there is still some worrying in your heart. I can see you tired. What happened darling?
- Can I ask about this new person?

Think about the chat in advance

The next option for switching to a different topic is to think ahead in the chat. If you realize that your imagination is running out and you won't be able to provide more soon, think ahead:

"Hmm, I'm about to run out of ideas, we're talking about love, but the user also has a work/family interest."

When you know this beforehand, it will help you to transition the conversation very smoothly and gently, so that the user doesn't even realize that you've been talking about work for an hour before, and somehow you've been talking about how to spend their honeymoon for the second hour.

If you were talking about the outcome of the problem, bring the topic to its logical conclusion. For example, "Yes my dear, I can totally agree with you, I see here that it will be a perfect time for you to grow in your career, and you will be able to not lose connection with your partner, this will also grow!" and then we leave the engagement, which will already be related to love/the topic you want to shift to.

Boom, you've moved on to another topic, and it didn't feel like you did it super intentionally and unnaturally - you're really interested in how things are going.

Building relationships with users

The preceding descriptions help a lot in building user trust. Remember - when you communicate with a person for a long time, trust this person with your deepest feelings, and this person resonates with your type of communication - don't you want to come back to this person to tell them what your ex finally wrote to you? That's right, you do!

So be sure to follow the following points on the call:

▼ Look for signals 📡

It's a fact that if you can clearly read signals from, for example, a user's partner, or a situation at work, using the same cards, you can build a picture for yourself, because when we look at something from the side, we can see it better because our head is cold.

▼ Keep track of time ⌚

To build relationships, it's important to understand how often a person is on the platform, so you can catch the moment when both you and the person are online and remind them of yourself in just a couple of minutes after they are free.

▼ Mirroring 🪞

It is important to feel the users. You have to be different with everyone - if the user believes in one tool that you use and does not prefer another, it is better to provide them with the answers based on the first one which creates safe and comfortable atmosphere for them.

🧠 Tips and tricks to help with audio calls

▼ 1. Try to find out everything you can about the user

This is the most obvious advice, but it is often forgotten by experts because they are simply afraid that the user will leave.

Try to find out everything you can about the user. What does he/she do for a living, what is his/her job, how old is the child, what is the dog's name? Yes, you may not need all the information about the dog's name in the future, but you show how interested you are in the user, create an atmosphere of support, and if you use it in a chat one day, wow, he/she remembers the dog's name!

Not only will this help to keep the conversation going, but if you also know something about, for example, the user's profession, you can also say "Oh wow dear! I know that Project Manager is actually really hard work, because everything is on you, you are so strong to cope with it!" - this empathy, given in a positive tone, increases the importance of the user, he feels that 'really, I am so good!'. So it's 3 in one - a longer call, empathy, and increased user confidence. It's great.

▼ 2. Become friends with your browser

Your browser is what gives you so many opportunities to continue the chat. Put all the important links in separate folders, know where they are and where to find what you need to use. It is important to know the hot keys, to Google queries correctly.

Firstly, it will speed up your answers, help you when you need to change or add something, and secondly, if you realize during the call that the user may be from a country with completely different rules - you simply cannot say that the crash did/will do it because he/she was/will be upset about alcohol, it may simply be banned. You'll have to get out of it, which can reduce the user's trust in the future, and it's just unpleasant, so being able to quickly Google during your call is a good thing.

▼ 3. Try working in split screen mode

This is a very cool point, and its convenience is that you will see all your important links on the left, not on top. You will see all the folders you need clearly. One tab is the CRM, the second is what you need now.

▼ 4. Make a list of questions for all types of user concerns

Try to break down each area into something more esoteric and mystical:

-Will this work really bring you mental satisfaction?

-On what levels does the trigger occur and what signal does the body want to give about the situation?

Try to build a structure for yourself that you can turn to when the inspiration leaves you, because seeing these questions in front of you can help you realize what you haven't talked about yet, and some of the questions can give you a new way to look deeper, bigger, further.

When making a list of these questions, focus and imagine that YOU are the user. What would you really like to know about your field of work or love? What would you like to know about your family?

Don't forget, users are people just like you, and most of us have the same problems and desire to open the door more, connect yourself and the user - you've been communicating with them for a long time, so as an expert you already have a certain idea about the life, thoughts, and excitement of your whale, so try to put yourself in their shoes and feel - if I were there, would I be interested in hearing this and that?

For example

Pain is business and development:

- User perspectives at the current location
- Financial situation if the user stays in the field
- Prospects for the user if he/she changes jobs
- What kind of relationships will develop with people in the new place
- How quickly the user will be able to find a new place
- When is the best time to start looking for a job and change, is it worth starting now
- What areas of life can be affected by a job change.

This is a case study of just one issue, career prospects, but we have many factors in place that can affect the situation in a user's life. It's literally what they see in their lives almost every day, so it's important to them, and it will be responded to.

▼ 5. Draw more than 1 card.

For some questions, this will be enough in terms of timeline, but it's cool to see more combinations.

Why: To look at the pictures on the cards - to understand the situation and what needs to be said - more pictures - more associations and understanding of the user's situation, what can be hidden, and whether he really loves her without any "buts"?