Intonation

Your voice is also a tool, so it's important to know how to use it during audio-calls.

It is necessary to be able to work with your voice because this way you:

- Show empathy through tone of voice
- Add emotionality to reading
- Highlight the most important points so that the user pays attention to them
- Distinguish between narrative and interrogative sentences
- Create a mystical and spiritualistic atmosphere

If your tone of voice is not different and adapted to the situation, the user will not feel engaged, user will feel that you are robotic and uninterested in their case, and will end the call faster than they could and then not return to the platform

Work on your tone of voice (video 1 and video 2). It should be welcoming, friendly, supportive, caring, professional, and slightly formal. Never shout, show disdain, devaluation, or anger.

Empathy

The moments when you need to show empathy don't differ from live chat. But in audio calls, it's important to show it quickly.

You can use the same phrases as in a chat!

Speed + context + correct intonation are the main characteristics of showing empathy the right way.

If you need to stop your reading, do so. It's important to express empathy at the right time, when the user needs it the most, and do it with the right tone of voice. If you were saying something positive and smiling, and the user shares sad information, change your tone.

What you need to do if you notice a change in user behavior:

- Mirror the user's mood
- Show empathy verbally
- return to a positive ToV if it is still appropriate.

If you feel that you need to know more information about the essence of empathy, we recommend seeing this video. Also, we highly recommend doing the exercise that the speaker suggests at the end of the video.

How to improve your voice

Audio calls can be compared to public speaking, so in addition to practicing different intonations and accents, you should work on your diction, breathing, and timbre.

Intonation and emphasis

It's important to be able to intonate your sentences correctly and emphasize the semantic parts that the user will find most interesting and relevant, which you will talk about in the future with the user.

In this video, you'll find the rules on how to use intonation to change the meaning of a sentence, how to pronounce questions correctly, and how to speak the information you've already spoken about. This video contains the basic intonation patterns. And here is theoretical information supplemented with practical exercises.

There is another video that shows you how to express emotions through intonation.

Breathing and exercises for the development of the speech apparatus

To give you enough air for long conversations, watch this video.

Speed of speaking

You need to speak clearly and at a pace that the user can understand. This video contains tips on how you can slow down your speech so that the user understands you and would want to listen to you, rather than trying to figure out what you said.
